The UIC John Marshall Law School offers three types of professional degrees: Juris Doctor (JD), Master of Laws (LLM), and Master of Jurisprudence (MJ).

- Most of the LLM programs and most concentrations for the MJ program can be completed online.
- Students may complete any of the degree programs on a part-time or full-time basis and may begin their studies in the fall or the spring semester. Full-time students generally complete the JD program in three years, whereas part-time students who take 10–11 hours each semester can complete the JD program in approximately four years.
- Joint degree (JD/LLM) offerings are available in each of the seven LLM program specialty areas.
- The Law School’s degree programs are considered professional programs and are not administered by the Graduate College. The Law School website provides additional information on the Law School’s degree programs, admission requirements, and the application process.

JD Program
The JD program requires completion of 90 hours: 53 required core hours, including 3 hours of clinical or externship course work, and 37 elective hours. JD students may earn an optional JD concentration in one of four areas:

1. Intellectual Property Law
2. International Human Rights
3. Sustainability
4. Trial Advocacy and Dispute Resolution

LLM Programs
LLM programs are offered in seven specialty areas of law:

1. Employee Benefits
2. Estate Planning
3. Intellectual Property Law
4. International Business and Trade Law
5. Privacy and Technology Law
6. Real Estate Law
7. Tax Law